Gall Peters World Map. First conceived in the 19th century, the Gall-Peters projection has the advantage of representing our world in a more realistic way by maintaining the real proportions between the sizes of continents, which is what the Mercator map lacks. That is why Original Map considered it right to propose this projection of the globe that constitutes the Peters map. Like the other

Peters Projection World Map (Folded) - WorldView

The Peters Projection world map shows all the countries in proportion to their relative sizes using five pastel colours. Traditional flat maps of the world have tended not to show countries in proportion to one another. This map therefore provides a helpful corrective to the distortions of traditional world maps. It is felt that traditional world maps have been drawn to the advantage of the world map uses Mercator's projection which shows compass directions accurately but distorts the sizes of countries. To improve the area accuracy later maps often use 'rounded grids' but these have then distorted the compass directions. The Peters projection is a true representation both of country size and of the north-south and east-west

controversial, images of the World. It was first introduced by historian and cartographer Dr. Arno Peters in 1974 and has since become a world best seller. As the only totally correct representation of the earth is a globe, cartographers have to distort the sphere in order to print it on flat paper. This map preserves equal area and retains a
